Teacher evaluations help faculty, students succeed

TEVAL is one of two teacher evaluations K-State offers as a way for students to provide their input on teachers.

By ERIN HILDRETH
THE COLLEGIAN

K-State offers two ways for students to evaluate teachers and courses that usually takes place at the end of the semester: TEVALs and IDEA reports. Each report lets students offer feedback on their classroom learning experience and helps teachers understand areas they need to improve.

“From personal experience, when I have a good teacher I kind of just rush through and fill out the evaluation form with good marks,” Sami Powers, freshman in communication sciences and disorders, said. “If I had a bad teacher, I would personally take time to say why I think that teacher demonstrated bad teaching qualities because I wouldn’t want students to have that teacher. But, so far I have had all good teachers. Maybe that’s because of the course evaluation process, I don’t know.”

K-State leaves it up to the different colleges and departments to choose what kind of teacher evaluation they want to implement within their programs.

The TEVALs can be administered either electronically or on paper to be handwritten.

The electronic TEVALs may open to students at any time in the semester to take and it is up to the professor to create the questions included on the form. The handwritten TEVAL forms include standard questions such as “Does the instructor increase your desire to learn more about this subject?”

Faculty create agricultural center, focus work on helping rural businesses

By EMILY VELISEK
THE COLLEGIAN

Three K-State faculty members have created a center that will help rural businesses learn about new online market strategies.

Cheryl Boyer, associate professor of horticulture forestry and recreation, brought together Lauri Baker, assistant professor of communication and agricultural education, and Hikaru Peterson, professor of agricultural economics, to start the Center for Rural Enterprise Engagement. The center formulated from research that the team conducted in marketing strategies.

“The group is starting with nursery and garden centers to learn how they are using (marketing strategies) successfully, so they can help the rural businesses capitalize on what larger businesses have learned in different markets,” Boyer said.

Through this, the group said they want to help people in small rural communities grow their businesses and make them successful. Some of the goals for the center are to do hands-on training for all the new online marketing outlets.

“I do think one of the things we offer that is unique is that there are some programs out there that are designed to train people how to use social media, and even some to train people in agriculture and natural resources industry,” Baker said. “But many of them aren’t research-based information.”

This is a large reason why the group started to come together, so that they could start research in this area. As the center grows, the group said they want to work with undergraduate researchers and involve students in the program with the hope that maybe there will be possible courses and workshops for students to help with the center.

Undergraduate students have already worked for the group by conducting research and making posters of their research, but the team said they want those students to be able to do more in the future.

Peterson said she believes the center “will bring national recognition to Kansas State in the future” and will hopefully help businesses outside of Kansas; maybe even internationally. The group said they feel the center is important to K-State because it aligns with the land grant mission and will be serving people in the community close to the school.

All three of the faculty members are supported by the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station, which allotted them funding from the National Institute of Food and Agriculture as a part of the multi-state Hatch project “Sustainable Practices, Economic Contributions, Consumer Behavior and Labor Management in the U.S. Environmental Horticulture Industry.”

They received $55,000 per year for three years, which is the dollar amount for hiring a research associate. After the three years, the group said they hope to be self-funded.

Boyer, Baker and Peterson said they are excited to see the center come so far and are ready to see what the future holds.

Millennials might surpass baby boomers as ‘me generation’

By MORGAN BELL
THE COLLEGIAN

“Self-centered” and “self-absorbed” seem to be adjectives often used to describe “kids these days.” This millennial generation, however, is not the first one to question the rules and defy societal norms.

Following World War II, there was a temporary but noticeable increase in the birth rate from 1946-64, according to the History Channel website.

Members of this generation had new ways of thinking and they had a changed outlook on life, including a heavy focus on self-fulfillment, according to the Smithsonian website.

“To me, the baby boomers realized their individuality and ‘breaking free’ from the norm, and they took advantage of it,” Caley Greving, junior in management, said. “They started to get out from under their parents’ scrutiny and do their own in journalism and mass communications, the generation before the baby boomers are credited with winning a world war, and sacrifice was what they grew up with.

“Many of them, of course, had grown up through a depression and subsequently a world war,” Wirka said. “I really think that they raised their children in an atmosphere that said ‘we did all of this for you,’ and their general attitude was to ‘make the world this better place for you, and we did that. Now here it is.’”

The Fixx app is available for free on Android and iOS.

Virtual Wallet

Life is busy and it's hard to stay on top of everything, especially your money. Virtual Wallet dials down the pressure. It's a simple way to keep all your financial stuff in order and track it in one place. With Virtual Wallet, you can track your everyday spending, set up short-term savings for that summer trip coming up and save long term. Some features include overdraft protection, paying bills online, quick transfer of funds and a bill due date organizer where you can pay them directly from the app.

The Virtual Wallet app is available for free on Android and iOS.

Anza Money

Anza is a bookkeeping and money tracking application for your phone. Set budgets, schedule transactions, protect your pin code and set up screen widgets in this free app.

Anza Money is available only on Android.

Mint

Mint is a user-friendly budgeting tool that makes sense of your spending today and sets you up for success tomorrow. Set financial goals of monthly spending and get alerts when you are close to those budgets. The app knows the difference between a restaurant and a gas station, so you don't have to spend time sorting your transactions. You can even receive free money tips for savings. All of this is just at the reach of your fingertips.

The Mint app is available for free on Android, iOS and Windows.

Tab

Out with friends and need to split the bill? Tab helps you do this by adding each person in, scanning the check, and allocating who ordered what. Tab even allows you to enter in and split up the tip!

The Tab app is available for free on Android and iOS.

RetailMeNot

RetailMeNot saves you time and money when shopping. Find discounts in your area and get the best bang for your buck. Find coupons for most all stores and plan to save before you start shopping.

The RetailMeNot app is available for free on Android and iOS.

REDLaser

Scan the product's bar code and instantly find the best deal around; it's that easy. Use Redlaser to get the best deals. RedLaser partners with thousands of stores across the world to find you the best price so you can better allocate your money.

REDLaser is available for free on Android, iOS and Windows.

Credit Karma

View your credit score along with what factors are determining it, how you can work towards improving it and monitor for potential identity theft. This app lets you track your credit score so you can be proactive at making it the best it can be.

The Credit Karma app is available for free on Android and iOS.

In addition to the above-mentioned apps, you can also look to see if your bank, credit card companies or student loan servicers have apps to use. This can aid you in knowing how much you have in your accounts at all times, deposit checks electronically and pay your bills at the touch of your finger. Take back control of your finances from the convenience of your phone.

Saving money doesn't have to be a hassle. With some user-friendly apps, you can be on your way towards better savings in no time.

ME GENERATION | Some attribute millennials' self-absorption to technology

Wirka said he was not sure this had the desired effect. He said he believes that although what the parents of the baby boomers did was positive, some of the baby boomers themselves may have taken it too far.

"Maybe in some cases they didn't earn or work as hard as they could, and they felt some form of entitlement," Wirka said. "So, while I think the generation that raised the baby boomers was trying to do something good, it didn't necessarily work out entirely that way."

As a result, the baby boomers were the first generation to be called the "Me Generation." Now, however, some people claim that the millennial generation (people born between the 1980s and the early 2000s) have taken over the "Me Generation" title due to a large amount of self-centeredness.

"I think more people from the millennials are consumed with themselves and looking out for themselves more than looking out for others," Greiving said. "I think the baby boomers were like that, but definitely not as bad."

Greiving said she believes the change can be partially attributed to technology and a self-driven attitude. The baby boomers may have started the trend toward self-centeredness, but the millennials have capitalized it.

"Technological advances have put millennials in front of baby boomers, in my opinion," Greiving said. "Also, more people realize that they can be successful on their own and will do anything to get where they're going. I think this is why they are more of the 'Me Generation' than baby boomers."

Alec Khoury, junior in economics, was born in 1994 and as such is a member of the millennial generation. He said he also believes the millennials are the "Me Generation."

"I believe that they are the 'Me Generation' because everyone is so focused on everything that they can get, and just the culture in general seems a lot more selfish," Khoury said. "Everyone in our generation thinks they're going to grow up and be famous and rich and cool."

The shift from self-sacrifice to self-centeredness started with the baby boomers, but has continually grown throughout the decades. It can be argued that the sense of individuality and belief in oneself are positive traits gained through the change in culture initiated by the baby boomers. That being said, it is the sense of entitlement and selfishness that follows the "Me Generation." The baby boomers are the originals, but millennials are portraying beliefs and attitudes that contest the title.

Whether you believe the baby boomers or the millennials deserve the "Me Generation" title, Wirka cautions against getting caught up in your own perceptions. "Especially in teaching and, well, other professions, something that you don't want to do is allow yourself to get trapped into just your historical perspective, just your context," Wirka said. "Because it's a different world."

Center offers local, team-based mental health treatment

By NICOLE WALKER
THE COLLEGIAN

Katie's Way, a local facility that will provide children and young adults ages 2-26 a way to prevent and overcome mental health challenges, will open for service on Monday.

The center's mission is to change and improve treatment for children and young adults who are facing challenges with mental health, no matter how big or small those issues may be.

Manhattan residents Jeff and Leanne Mathis established the treatment center after losing their daughter, Katie Mathis, who suffered from challenges with mental health.

"I made the decision to change the way mental health is provided," Jeff said. "That's what Katie's Way is."

According to Jeff, before Katie's Way, there was no place in Manhattan for children and young adults to receive long-term treatment for mental health problems.

"At any point in time, 30 percent of kids and young adults have suicidal thoughts," Jeff said. "Less than 5 percent actually receive help.

It's just so unnecessary," Katie's Way also hired credentialed psychologists and psychiatrists, including licensed psychologist Matt Wassom.

"I was pretty familiar with the region and understood the need for someone here," Wassom said.

The people behind Katie's Way said they believe that using a team-based approach for assessment and treatment is the most effective and fastest way to help. This means having psychologists and psychiatrists work together under the same roof to decide what the best treatment is for the individual, as well as their families, if they choose.

"We focus on comprehensive team based care, which I think is associated with the best outcomes," Wassom said.

The Mathis family said they have felt compelled to give back to the community and feel very strongly that mental health among young adults needs to be talked about.

"To know that there might be other people that are suffering in silence, we felt like we needed to start a conversation," Leanne Mathis said.

Katie's Way accepts all insurance plans and has partnered up with No Stone Unturned, a specialized outpatient pediatric clinic dedicated to providing high-quality therapy for children. If copays and deductibles are a barrier to receiving care, No Stone Unturned is there to help with that as well.

Katie's Way provides all types of therapy including individual, family and group therapy. Services also include parent and school consultation as well as psychological testing.

Located at 720 Poyntz Ave.,

Katie's Way provides treatment to

"Individualized, custom, fast, effective care is what we're after," Jeff said.

On the shelf above the prep sink, there were approximately 20-30 round plastic food containers that were stored wet and clean and not able to properly air dry. In a spoon drawer, there were several plastic spoons that were stored wet and clean and not able to properly air dry. Corrected on site: person in charge unstacked the food containers so they could properly air dry.

4-202.11(A)(2) On the utensil rack to the right of the prep sink, there were three large plastic food grade containers with broken edges. There was one clear plastic lid with deep cracks. In the spatula drawer, there was one rubber spatula with a deep crack on the food contact surface. Corrected on site: items were discarded.

4-601.11(C) There are at least six ceiling vents with dust buildup in the kitchen. In the Quik Cats walk-in cooler, there is minor dust buildup around the fan blower and ceiling.

6-501.11 In the Quik Cats walk-in cooler, there was one light fixture that was broken.

Slightly sarcastic horoscopes from Jon Parton

JON PARTON
THE COLLEGIAN

Pisces (Feb. 19 - March 20)

There may be a time this week when you think your friends are talking bad about you behind your back. Don't be ridiculous ... your friends never talk about you.

Aries (March 21 - April 19)

You're the type who always takes the bull by the horns. Quit stealing bulls, you jerk.

Taurus (April 20 - May 20):

This week, you will go to an amazing concert. The stars didn't tell me this; it's all over your Facebook. Enough already!

Gemini (May 21 - June 20)

Uranus is passing through Gemini this week, much like the kidney stone you will pass on Friday.

Cancer (June 21 - July 22)

People really enjoy your company, Cancer. No, not you, the business you work for.

Leo (July 23 - Aug. 22)

You will exude confidence and style all week. However, your eight cats may not fully appreciate it.

Virgo (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22)

Saturday will be the most important day of your life. Or the most impotent. The stars are lousy spellers.

Libra (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22)

When life gives you lemons, you make lemonade. Then someone usually steals your lemonade. It's gonna be a tough week, Libra.

Scorpio (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21)

There are two types of people, Scorpio. Those who are successful and productive in life, and those who read horoscopes.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21)

This week, Sagittarius is likely to hit the mark. Just be sure to bury the body where it can't be found.

Capricorn (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19)

Buying lottery tickets is not a secure retirement plan. It's time you diversified and invested in sick, rich relatives.

Aquarius (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18)

The stars reveal you to be a kind, generous and loving person. The stars are also known to lie once in a while.

TEVAL | Faculty fill out evaluations too

TEVALs may include up to 20 extra questions specifically designed by the instructor, according to the K-State Teaching and Learning website.

IDEA forms are administered in person for all on-campus courses and online for distance education classes. IDEA forms offer a more detailed way for students to evaluate teachers based on how well they felt the teachers taught the objectives for that particular course. They also evaluate whether students felt they left the class feeling that they could show excellence pertaining to the certain objectives. Teachers are allowed to fill in an additional 20 questions to IDEA forms as well.

"The IDEA form is much more detailed," Torrey Dickinson, professor in women's studies, said. "It provides more detailed feedback to teachers so they can actually strengthen parts of the class. They can maintain certain parts of the class, work on parts of the class that come up as weaker and it is very much tied into the learning out-

In addition, teachers all fill out a form called a Faculty Information Form, similar to the one students fill out. The difference is that they fill out how they taught the class, the factors that played into how well they taught the class and what types of students took the course with them that semester.

The process then moves from the students' and teachers' hands to those of the Teaching and Learning Center, where scores are averaged for each category. The teachers receive the forms back, usually after the grading period is over. Department heads can offer suggestions on how to better a certain category if it has a low average rating for students, but Dickinson said the teacher should note that even if the department head doesn't come and talk to them about it.

"That's something for teachers to really think about like, 'I don't understand what the objectives of the class were or I didn't think the readings were relevant to the class,'" Dickinson said. "If you have enough of those, you need to take them seriously because it means you are not communicating or you need to change things, or both."

The university also looks at how well teachers do over a period of time when processing evaluation forms and considering mitigating factors like class size. There are a lot of factors that can bias student evaluation forms, like the likeability of the professor teaching the course or the student's familiarity with the material; that is taken into consideration in each evaluation.

The evaluation forms aren't just about helping teachers better their teaching styles; the Dean's Advisory Committee uses evaluation forms when making their decisions regarding promotions and tenure, and also when deciding awards for professors to receive.

"I think teacher evaluations are an accurate representation of how students feel and are very important," Jordan Stuckey, sophomore in social work, said. "Since they're anonymous, I feel completely comfortable sharing my honest thoughts."

Hale ranks among best in nation

K-State's Hale Library was featured in collegian.net's list of "most amazing college libraries" as the fourth best library in the U.S. According to its website, collegian.net's mission is " ... to rank everything college and dissect every aspect of student life."

Hale libraries came in fourth behind the Linderman Library at Lehigh University, the William Oxley Thompson Memorial Library at Ohio State University and the Cook Legal Research Library at the University of Michigan.

According to the article, libraries on the list were selected due to their "... amazing on-campus experiences, provide stunning and rare book collections as well as (offering) fantastic campus views."

Moran's bi-partisan bill passes unanimously through committee

A bi-partisan bill introduced by Sen. Jerry Moran of Kansas and Sen. John Tester of Montana passed unanimously through the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee according to the Junction City Post.

The Wounded Warriors Federal Leave Act will provide first-year federal workers who have service-related disabilities with sick leave. The bill aims to ensure that service disabled veterans would no longer have to choose between receiving treatment and unpaid leave when starting a new job.

"Service-disabled veterans who have served our nation with duty and honor deserve peace of mind when transitioning into the federal workforce and civilian life," Moran, a member of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, said to the Post.

K-State starts postseason hunt with Big 12 matchup against TCU

MEN'S BASKETBALL

By EMILIO RIVERA
THE COLLEGIAN

With only one guaranteed game left for K-State men's basketball, it's safe to say that the season hasn't gone as planned for the Wildcats.

The high aspirations that were placed on the team, from competing for a Big 12 regular season championship to a deep NCAA Tournament run, have seemingly spiraled out of control to just winning four games in a row in order to make the NCAA Tournament.

"You have three seasons within the season: you have the nonconference season, you have the conference season, then this postseason opportunity," K-State head coach Bruce Weber said Monday. "For the guys, it's a chance to show people what we could've been or should've been and what we are at times."

The task in front of this K-State team is no easy one. The Wildcats are the eighth seed at the Big 12 Conference Tournament, meaning that if they make it past the first game, they will have a date with heated rivals Kansas in the second round.

K-State needs to win four games this week. But before Kansas, the streak has to start on Wednesday when the Wildcats (15-16, 8-10) take on a struggling TCU (17-14, 4-14) team that hasn't won a conference game outside the state of Texas since 2012-13.

TCU's season may be just as weird as the Wildcats', which is a feat itself. The Horned Frogs started 13-0 in nonconference play before desperately fighting just to reach four conference wins.

"It's still not going to be easy, TCU's still very good," Weber said. "You win that one and you still know it's going to be tough to go through the weekend."

In 14 losses, TCU has been outscored by 11.2 points per game.

In their four conference victories; however, the Horned Frogs have been able to trounce their opponents by 16.5 points per game.

K-State managed to split the regular season series, taking the first game in Bramlage before being throttled by the Horned Frogs in Fort Worth, Texas.

"The first game (against TCU) we had great energy, we had life and Marcus (Foster) made some shots, which spread their defense out," Weber said. "At their place, it was one of a couple games where I didn't think we had the energy and life that we needed, and that was disappointing. The biggest thing on Wednesday is going to be energy, life, excitement and determination."

In the second game against TCU, K-State shot just 34.5 percent from the field, including 4-11 from behind the arc. One of the most astounding facts that came out of the game was that the Wildcats almost had as many offensive rebounds (17) as they had made baskets (19).

"You thought, shooting wise, that between Justin (Edwards), Marcus (Foster), Nigel (Johnson) and Tre (Harris), we'd have enough 3-point shooters to spread defenses out," Weber said. "That hasn't happened consistently, so now teams have been able to sag off and help."

In the two games against the Horned Frogs, K-State has had only one of those four players Weber mentioned reach double-digits in each game. In the first game, sophomore guard Marcus Foster came off of the bench to score 23 points, while in the second game freshman guard Tre Harris came off the bench to score 14 points.

Sensing the pressure that has been put on them to succeed in the conference tournament, the K-State seniors called a team meeting this past weekend to get on the same page about what it's going to take in order to succeed and make the NCAA Tournament.

"We all want to go in there (to the Big 12 Championships) and be on the same page," senior forward Thomas Gipson said. "We feel like the only way we can get to the (NCAA) Tournament is if we win the Big 12 Tournament. We just all want to be on the same page and let everyone know that we mean business when we get down there."

Foster echoed both Gipson and Weber's thoughts about the Big 12 Tournament being a new season, even going as far as to believing that the eighth-seeded Wildcats are still a team to be feared in the tournament.

"We believe that we're one of the top teams still, even though we're eighth," Foster said. "We believe that we can go out there and win the tournament. It's a new season for us, we look at it as though it's 0-0 and we have to go win the first game and let the rest take care of itself."

Wildcats continue to build momentum

GOLF

By EMILIO RIVERA
THE COLLEGIAN

After three rounds at the Tiger Invitational on the par 72 at Grand National Lake Course in Opelika, Alabama, the K-State men's golf team finished in a tie for fifth place at 17-over par 881.

In the final round Tuesday, K-State finished six-over par, shooting a 294 on the day to improve one spot from Monday's sixth-place position.

The 17-over-par-overall performance was the Wildcats' second-best score of the year, trailing only a 9-over par finish at the Desert Intercollegiate in February.

In the 16-team field, K-State finished five-strokes behind the next-best team (Southern Alabama), while finishing 42 strokes behind the winners and only team to finish below par for the tournament host-team Auburn.

"I think for where we are right now as a team it was a good finish for us," K-State head coach Grant Robbins said to K-State Sports following Tuesday's final round. "We were close to having a good round today, but we had a couple of double bogeys on the last hole and were not able to finish it off. We have really improved in several areas since the fall."

Redshirt sophomore Matt Green secured his third-straight top-10 performance of the season, and his best finish since winning the Jack Nicklaus Invitational in September, with a four-under par 212 to tie for seventh place.

Also finishing in the top 20 for the Wildcats was sophomore Seth Smith. Smith fell five positions Tuesday with a two-over par 74 final round to finish in a tie for 16th place at even-par 216.

Robbins' team will take a nearly two-week break before their next competition, which is the Duck Invitational in Eugene, Oregon, on March 23-24.
